

Scenario: Workplace Spying: The Lidl Case

Workplace spying is not bad only if during the work hours and when inside the workplace to ensure the security of the products and to supervise the performance of the employees. But in the case of the Lidl Grocery, what they are doing is too much. They have no right to investigate the private life of their employees. Whatever their employees do after working hours, the company doesn't have the right to know or to investigate. The Lidl Company is violating personal privacy and human dignity of every employee in their company.
